"In writing this poem I have relied mainly on the interest of the beautiful Gilgamesh epic, and not tried to produce a brilliant or superlative piece of work of my own. Many of the passages are simply paraphrases of the original text as translated by distinguished Assyriologists ... I have woven into the main theme other legends, such as the Creation epic, the Descent of Ishtar into Arah, and the Adapa legend."—Pref.

Originally printed in the American pioneer, Cincinnati, 1942, v. 1, p. 215-222, 251-267.

The accompanying letter of the owner of the manuscript, who was himself in Wayne's army, states that the Journal was written by "a Lieutenant Boyer" (p. 254). No such name is found on the army rolls, and it is probable that the writer referred to was John Boyer of Virginia who took part in the expedition as lieutenant in the 3d sub-legion.

Cover title, 148 p. 19^{cm}. (Old South leaflets. General series, v. 2, no. 40)

The original ms., after being used by Hutchinson, Paine and other early historians, was deposited in the Old South church, Boston, and disappeared at the time of the British evacuation, 1776.

Young discovered that the records of the First church of Plymouth contained a transcript of the first part of the original ms. made by Nathaniel Morton. This had been wrongly attributed to Morton as author and partly printed in Plimouth Harbinger's historical collection, consisting of three papers. Plimouth, 1792, v. 1, p. 345-373.

In 1853 the original Bradford ms. was found in the Folger library of the Bishop of London. It was copied for the Mass. hist. soc. and printed in its Collections, 4th series, v. 3. In 1867 the ms. was formally returned to Massachusetts and a new edition printed.
